The number of quotations in the corresponding pages of Richardson's Dictionary is 590.

About one-fourth of the Section is taken up with the articles on the verbs get and give, and their derivatives. The large space occupied by these verbs has been necessary on account of the extreme generality of their fundamental meaning, and the consequent great variety in their specific applications. The result of investigation into the history of these words appears to be that get was an adoption from Scandinavian (the equivalent form having, so far as is known, existed in OE. only in compounds), and that Scandinavian influence was concerned in the origin of the northern form give, which has in all dialects displaced the original yeve or jive.

Other important words of Teutonic etymology are ghastly, ghost, giddy, gild, gill sb., gird, girdle, girl, glad, glade, glass. The remaining words are chiefly of Romanic or Latin origin; there are a few Greek derivatives, and an unusually large number of words ultimately of Oriental origin, as gharry, ghaut, ghasal, ghasi, ghee, ghoul, ghurry, gauour, giddea, gingall, ginger, gingham, gingili, gingko, ginseng, giraffe.

Amongst the words of remarkable sense-history are gesture, ghost, giant, gig, gin, gingerly, glance, gland. Etymological facts or suggestions not contained in other English dictionaries will be found under gewgaw, gherkin, giddy, gincrack, gingerbread (which was not originally a compound of ginger and bread), gingerly, girl, glade, glance.
